

I am a Substitute teacher, so this is a generalization of my experience. Usually, each school has one Technical Guy through whom all technical issues are directed. More often than not, the Technical Guy does not want to do anything new, or anything to one single computer. The Technical Guy is usually a brick wall and there is no recourse when he inevitably refuses to consider anything new, different, or would in some way cause him work.